

"Okay your father managed to get a mouse. Now how do we use it?"

Welcome To Computer Basics

I am going to assume you have never operated a computer before and know absolutely nothing about the functions. Even if you do know about some of the things we are going to learn, don't skip over it. There might be an added tip or it may just refresh your memory.

This book is just the simple facts, very basic and is a "hands on" course. It is written and designed for a person who's sitting at a computer. Try things and don't be afraid to make a mistake. We can always close all windows and start over. This book is not going to turn you into a computer wizard, but you certainly will be advanced enough to know how to search for any added information you may need.

When someone tells you to "click" this will almost always mean that you should "click" with your left mouse button. That is if you are right handed. If you are left-handed, it would mean the opposite and the mouse would be set for a left handed person. I will at the beginning of this course tell you which side of the mouse to click, but as time goes on I will just say to "click" meaning for you to left click the mouse.
